GAY RAG

Volume 5 - Issue 3
March 2010

Welcome to Paradise!

In March, Key West celebrates St. Patty's day in a different way.

In response to gays being told they could not march in the St. Patty's day parade of a major city, Key West started Pink Paddy's Day.

Wear your pink and join in the fun as we hit all the gay bars in town.

E-mail your questions to nana@keywestgayrag.com

Dear Nana,

My boyfriend and I need your advice. We both work busy schedules and find that at the end of the day we both just want to flop down in bed, cuddle up, watch a little tv and drift off. This has become our regular pattern and we're both okay with it, but we got worried that not having sex more often would eventually take its toll on the relationship. So now, we've started a new rule that we have to have sex before bed (which we really do enjoy and feel closer and more together as a couple when we do) at least 3 times a week. Do think this will work to help keep the passion alive, or are we setting ourselves up to fail?

Jesus, Mary mother of God you two sound like breeders?! The problem with things like scheduling sex and setting up hard (hehe) and fast rules in the bedroom is that you end up treating sex like a chore. This isn't taking out the recyclables, or going to the gym, or weedwacking your bush gardens... this is Love! Though it is a good to be conscious of not letting too much time pass without bumping uglies (and at my age that term is completely appropriate); don't schedule it on the calendar. Try to let it happen naturally and mix it up. Tomorrow morning, instead of hitting the snooze button hit his boy button instead. When you're making dinner one night, turn the burners on low, bend him over the kitchen counter and find new uses for olive oil. Listen, the beauty of you gay boys and girls is that you don't have to feel the pressure to live "conventional" lives. You can write your own script. Stop acting like two fat married people from Illinois and be the fagtastic guys you know you are!

Dear Nana,

I have a great boyfriend. We've been together for 4 years and he still makes me smile when he walks in the room. He cooks, he cleans, he gets along wonderfully with all my friends and family, even the sex is still great. So I feel a little weird even complaining about this, but I need your advice. Both of us enjoy porn but no more than the average guy. But I've noticed in the last few years that his online porn consumption has gone wild. When I look at the browser history, he is visiting numerous sites, numerous times a day and they are all pay sites. It makes me think that he's not that into me anymore and that he is going to cheat. Our life seems perfect and he tells me all the time that I'm the only guy for him, but I still worry. Should I confront him about this or let sleeping dogs lay?

Okay, butter bean, let's look at this from all angles... like a genital wart. I think the biggest and most important parts of your letter are the first 3 sentences. It sounds like both of you really love each other and really fit. Porn is porn, it is not an affair. We all need to imagine a little variety from time to time and that's healthy. The thrills of a real, long term relationship (and there are many) are very different from the single life of jumping from bed to bed. Just because he wants to whack off to six guys punch-fucking on his laptop doesn't mean he wants that in his own life. If you love him and you trust him, then believe him when he says you're the only one. But, I wouldn't totally ignore your emotions, even if I think they're not spot on right now. You should tell him you have all this fear and anxiety over this, if only so that he can calm your mind and know what's going through it! Besides, if he thinks you're worried he isn't that into you anymore... he has no choice but to prove you wrong... all over your face and back!

THE NAKED TRUTH

by: Brad Loekle

I guess it started at an early age. I can't say that I remember much of my early childhood, but then again I don't remember a whole lot from last weekend either. But at some point during my adulthood, I noticed that in many of my toddler photos I am either partially or completely naked. I don't mean naked in the kitchen sink when you're getting a baby bath, I mean naked at picnics, parties and other social gatherings. I asked my mother recently about all these pictures and inquired as to why she never felt the need to cloth me during the Carter administration. She rolled her eyes, as she does at so much of what I do, and said, "Bradford, I clothed you every day. Many times a day, in fact, but you were not a fan of keeping your clothes on. So whenever you had the chance the tear them off and run around naked, you did." To which she added, with a smirk, "You were more prone to do that if you had an audience... but what else is new?!"

It would seem I was an exhibitionist from the time I could stand on two feet. This helped to explain why I always seem drawn to or drawn in to performance situations that involve nudity. In my comedy career it began on Fire Island about 4-5 years ago. A whole group of the local stars (Porsche, DJ Chuck, Rhett, Oliver, and many other faces that have also graced the bars and bathrooms of Duval) had gathered for a day on the beach to celebrate the summer and a good friend's birthday. I have always enjoyed swimming nude, but can only do it in the ocean on Fire Island; as it is frowned upon at the hotel swimming pool. I think this is mostly because the lesbians aren't a fan of seeing my kibbles and bits; which is fair because I'm not a big fan of their bush gardens either. So there we were, at the beach, with me swimming naked and drinking copious amounts of frozen cosmopolitan. Somewhere during all of this, I decided it would be hilarious to go up to one of our favorite police officers, completely naked, and ask him to arrest the ocean for stealing my swimsuit. I will, again, remind you that I am not responsible for my actions when Brant Kaiwi is around. That boy is like kryptonite to my common sense! Well, as some of you know, this day ended with me actually doing my evening show at the Ice Palace completely naked. For some reason, standing in front of a bunch of people naked isn't really sexual to me... it's just funny. I know, I should talk to someone about that, I'm sure...

Well, this led to me doing numerous shows where I've either been asked to be naked, or the audience has been naked. I performed this year for a queer nudist event where I had to tell jokes in front of 250 naked men. Believe me, it was not what I expected. Many were so old they had to lay their balls over their thighs to prevent them from getting caught under a chair leg. And then, on top of that, since it was a "formal" event, they had a buffet: 250 queers trying not to singe their manginas on the sterno burners of chafing dishes filled with chicken parmesan and filet of sole. And, fyi, I still went home alone...

Even this summer, when I got asked to play a supporting role in an off-Broadway musical parody of The Golden Girls, I ended up spending the entire show in assless chaps, G string, and a ball gag. Originally they had me in a jock strap but there were concerns that choreography might make that outfit too risqué. So we literally had to have a rehearsal where the director, choreographer and numerous cast members had to sit in different part of the theater to see if they could see my starfish. I dubbed it the "twat shot tech rehearsal". I just don't know what it is about my body by Pillsbury that makes people want to see it.

Back in my mother's living room, I asked her if she had ever worried that I was a pervert when I wouldn't stop getting naked as a kid. I don't ever remember her yelling at me for it, or making me feel ashamed; which is a wonderful thing on one level, but then again, look how I turned out! She looked at me, with little to know expression, and said, "We never really cared because you were always nude in the house or backyard. Eventually you started sneaking out the front door and walking into town naked, so that's when put a latch on the screen door and naked the doggie door shut. For some reason, we would always find you at the end of the block in front of the VFW. You'd be naked as can be, and sitting straddled on top of the big canon they had in the front yard, with a smile like the cat that ate the canary."

Not much has changed, Mom. Not much has changed...
