Hello From Paradise!

We hope by the time this goes to press, that we're once again welcoming our wonderful visitors back to our island paradise.

In the mean time, we need to say a very special thank you to everyone that has kept the country going through all of this, and while the picture may be of our medical professionals, we're also grateful to everyone from the police to the clerks at the grocery store for risking their own health for us.

Thank You!

LEZ GO OUT

I don't know about you but I've had enough TikTok and Instagram to last me a lifetime. I think I've walked the whole island at least 5 times and I've made my living room into a karaoke stage. Key West is doing a fantastic job with supplementing our karaoke needs, too. Bobby's Monkey Bar has made a Facebook version of their fabulous karaoke nights. You can even sign up for whichever time slot you prefer! People have gotten very creative. Keeps us from roaming the streets.

With the ongoing discussions regarding cruise ships, check points, masks, 6-10ft social distances, house parties and illegal rentals I decided not to write about the ongoing pandemic because we hardly need the reminder. Instead, I'd like to ask if you've seen the water on the Smather's Beach side of the island. It's GORGEOUS! While bobbing in the water off Reynold's Pier we saw a four foot barracuda and sting rays. The peace on the island has brought back the small-town feeling that initially drew my partner and me to the island. I see familiar tops of masked faces walking in my neighborhood. We smile as dramatically as we can with our eyes without looking too creepy and yell pleasantries to each other from across the street. Our small white dog looks a lot like a tumbleweed and our cat (because all lesbians have one) is slinking around unsure if it's really us or if we've been replaced by chubby cavewomen. Good thing they're talking about opening up the salons soon. Now... about the gym.

All in all I'm proud of our island. Lesbians have learned how to use Zoom for Hotdog Church meetings on Sundays and the gay boys still dominate drinking in the street in front of Bourbon and 801. I think we're going to make it through this with a renewed appreciation for strangers and someone else's cooking. Stay safe and distant Key West. Once it's safe.. Lez Go Out.. for a haircut.

LGBT Book Reviews by Terri Schlichenmeyer

"THE HEART: FRIDA KAHLO IN PARIS"
BY MARC PETITJEAN, TRANSLATED BY ADRIANA HUNTER
c.2020, Other Press | $25.00 | 208 pages

Every brush stroke must have had meaning.

Every color, every shading, every wipe and fingerprint and trowelmark left by the artist became a portrait of metaphor and mystery: what was the artist trying to say? Was it just a painting or, as in "The Heart" by Marc Petitjean, was there a story behind it for observers to unravel?

Because his father had led a colorful life, Marc Petitjean was surrounded by artwork and objets d'art for most of his childhood. One of those works was a painting that Petitjean understood was important to his father. Later, long after the elder man died, Petitjean learned how important the painting was when a stranger inquired about his father, and the affair he had with Frida Kahlo.

Michel Petitjean was just twenty-nine when he met Kahlo; she was thirty-three, and was staying in France at the time, having gone there because André Breton, who'd founded the surrealist movement, had decided on his own that Kahlo was a surrealist painter. Breton told her that he wanted to do an exhibit of her work but when Kahlo arrived in France, she was angered that Breton was unprepared for both her arrival and her show.

She'd met Breton when he and his wife, Jacqueline, came to Mexico to talk with Leon Trotsky, who was living temporarily with Kahlo and her husband, Diego Rivera. The Bretons stayed the Rivera's for several months – long enough for Kahlo to have a brief but playful sexual affair with Jacqueline before the Bretons returned to France.

Petitjean says that there is no way to know exactly how his father met Kahlo, but the first time they slept together "was the day Barcelona fell." They didn't speak the same language but he comforted her as best he could, and she grew to mean a lot to him. Later, he helped her pack up her paintings to return them to Mexico, and she gave him option of choosing any painting he wanted.

He chose The Heart.

In a surprisingly charming mixture of fact and fiction, author Marc Petitjean spins a dreamy tale of an artist and a painting that is in itself a mystery. That, the multiple hypotheses, and a lingering unknown make "The Heart" a captivating tale.

Petitjean depicts Paris in the pre-War years in a way that lets readers feel the devil-may-care extravagance of the city's residents living in the shadow of Nazism and looming trouble, giving this book a dark sense of forboding. He then imagines Kahlo's political leanings and adds to her mystique, giving her a certain cheeky flamboyance and, with passages that seem as if they're viewed through sheer white curtains, he shows us a Kahlo that falls easily in lust and love, but with a blithe sense of detachment.

Petitjean hints that his father was more upset about that than was Kahlo, but again – we'll never know for sure. Still, readers that love art, biographies, historical mysteries, and Kahlo in particular will find "The Heart" to be a stroke of enjoyment.

MY BIG GAY LIFE

Brad Loekle

SYMPTOMATIC PROBLEMATIC

So, self-quarantine really threw the gym-gays for a loop! I mean... I haven't seen this much abject terror and loss in the chiseled faces of queens since Princess Diana got turned into a Jenga piece in a French tunnel.

And listen, I get it. We all pick the things in our lives that are important to us. Some pick family, some pick work. Some pick the brain; some pick the body. Some pick hookers and blow... some are boring. So, I get it. Listen, I haven't been able to work or perform in front of audience in 3+ months. That's the longest I've ever gone without an audience since I was probably 15 or 16 years old. But WOW did the gym boys get broken during this.

I mean, I was at home, minding my own business on twitter just letting the day to day news raise my blood pressure to unsafe levels, when I saw a gym-gay bench pressing his sofa on the floor in his living room. Now I've rented enough bodies that look like his to know that it takes a lot of work to maintain it. And that weights are important, or whatever. But sweet, fictional Christ are you kidding me with benching the couch?! I mean all that was missing was the faint sound of him crying out of fear that no one will love him again if he doesn't look Gay He-Man every day of his life.

You know what? That's unfair. He-Man is already "Gay He-Man" and I should let him have that. I'm sorry... Adam of Eternia.

Here in LA, I've seen almost naked gay men running personal marathons in the rain just to try to get cardio in. I have an ab covered friend who fractured his ankle while trying to use the tree in front of his house as a “home gym”. I have no idea what he was doing, nor do I want to know. From the window in my home office, I can see into my neighbor’s yard. He has now created a sort of makeshift-homeless-people gym. It consists of things like a mop handle that he has tied 4 milk jugs full of sand to each end. He uses this as sort of a Tom Hanks in “Castaway”-style barbell. He also has a backpack full of rocks he wears while he does cardio. These are the actions of a madman. I miss the “old normal” of him just suntanning naked in his backyard, after the gym, and me just politely masturbating from the shadows of my window perch. Ah, the good old days!

And listen, us lazy people haven’t had it easy during this time either. Sure, I’m not missing the gym and I already was living a life that my doctor says “has the physical activity of an at-risk 3rd trimester pregnancy”; but there have been fitness challenges even for the most sedentary during this crisis. For instance, I’ve been convinced I’ve had COVID-19 at least 7 times in the last few months. Why, you ask? Because a lot of the symptoms of this virus are the same as the symptoms of just being a lazy fuck!

Shortness of breath? All the time. Body aches? Since I was seventeen. A dry cough? Every morning since my first hangover. Loss of taste and smell? Do you have any idea how much cocaine I’ve done in my life?!?!

So, trust me... fat kids don’t have it easy right now either. But I sure do hope that those who want to can return to their gyms soon. Because, frankly, a lot of you don’t have enough personality to pull off being chubby this summer.

ASK NANA

E-mail your questions to nana@keywestgayrag.com

Dear Nana,

First of all, I hope you're well during all this Corona craziness. I wanted to know if you had any tips for fighting cabin fever. I tend to be a social butterfly and all this social distancing and staying at home is making me a bit bonkers. Any tips?

Oh, I guess you just assume that since I'm a woman of a certain age I don't get put much usually? Listen just because both these hips are fake doesn't mean I don't have an active social life. When all you've got left is time on your hands you tend to make the most of it! But, also, I've been a bit of a hermit my whole life. So, if I spend one day running around and seeing people, it's just my nature to then take a day to myself. I love to read (both people and books) so that makes for a great hobby. And I love to cook. I've noticed that everyone these days is teaching themselves to bake bread... so why not pick a new dish... or a new skill... that you've always wanted to master and spend some time on that.

Also drinking is an excellent pastime.

Dear Nana,

My friends invited me to a large house party and I'm just not comfortable going, given all the stuff going on with Corona. My one friend is really pushing me to go and arguing about it all the time. Should I just go to shut him up?

Well, in my experience, "just" doing something because it will shut someone up is usually the path of last resort. Frankly, if this is the hill on which your friend wants to die... and I mean that literally and figuratively in this case... then it tells you more about him than your NOT going tells anyone about you. Your body, your choice. You don't have to go to anyone's extracurricular activity if you don't want to. You're a damn adult. And if they don't like that... they can stick it where the sun doesn't shine. You're responsible for your own happiness and your own safety. Not your friends, not your boss, not even your lover. You are. So, you do YOU!

DO YOU HAVE PROBLEMS? OF COURSE YOU DO! WHY NOT LET NANA HELP YOU?!
