PLAYING GAMES

by: Brad Loekle

I certainly understand why, if you weren't raised on things like video games and computers, they probably don't dominate your adult life. If you've ever wasted $500 on Rosetta Stone because you decided you were finally going to brush up on your Spanish; you know all too well that you, in fact, can't teach an old dog new tricks. Even if the dog used to know how to ask where the library was in another language when the dog was in high school. What amazes me about people my age and older though is our insistence that video games, computers and all the gadgets and toys kids have nowadays aren't the coolest things a kid could ever have. That's how technology is supposed to work. But all too often I hear things like "I liked our games better" or "these kids have no imagination... we had to use ours to make our own fun". And sure, that is true: we did have to use our imagination a lot more aggressively because toys prior to the last 20 years basically sucked. Take my generation: people 30-40 years old. We had video games but they were about as basic as you could get. One step above Pong... which was really only one step above staring at TV snow. Hell, for half of our childhood video games came in 8-track form. I guess since 8-tracks had been such a "success" in music, why not expand into other art forms, right? But we loved our video games more than anything because all our other toys were even worse! Hungry Hungry Hippos... what the fuck was that?! Was there ever a point to that? Battleship was really just bingo for adolescent boys, when you think about it. The biggest craze of my generation was Cabbage Patch Kids. It was just a doll. Not really any different than any shitty doll any kid had since prairie times but the real selling point for this doll was that it came with little, kid-sized, legal paperwork that you filled out to adopt the doll. You know, to make sure that if Xavier Roberts Sr. decided to clean up his act and come looking for his son someday, you'd be able to get a Mattel Restraining Order to make sure you kept your new baby brother. What... the holy fuck... was that about?

But even our generation got the same crap said to us by our parents and grandparents about how we had no imagination and when they were kids they had even shittier toys than we did. When you look further and further back the question isn't how kids today can become so wrapped up in video games and tablets; the real question is why the fuck did kids 100 years ago play with their toys at all? Those kids had toys so bad we don't even recognize them as toys anymore. My grandfather's generation didn't even have a ball most of the time so they played "Kick the Can". Their parents would give them a metal soup can, complete with razor sharp metal edges, as a toy in an era where things like a cut from metal can at 8 years old could mean you'd never get to go to college. Even further back I remember watching Little House on the Prairie with my family. Those kids were always playing with what I can only call "Hoop & a Stick". They'd use that stick to keep that thin metal hoop just rolling down the dirt road and they'd laugh and laugh. If you saw a 10 year old laughing hysterically while using a stick to roll a hoop down your street you'd lock the door and call the police. Don't Lie. And kids back then had real problems! What happens now to kids: bullying, ADD meds get off, divorce? Way back when those hoop loving little assholes had to deal with problems like Dropsy and bears! Diarrhea used to kill people... all the time. I remember on Little House... one day one of those kids woke up and was blind. Woke the fuck up... BLIND! No more Hoop & a Stick for you, dearie! But they were happy then, just like we were happy playing Naval bingo with our illegitimate half-sibling doll and just like kids today can use an iPad before they can use the toilet. They just have a much, much better Hoop & a Stick. So don't be a hater.

ZACHARY MOSES : MAN ABOUT TOWN

Yet another of my endless supply of brothers just visited me (I'm an ethnic Mormon). The best thing about this brother, is that he's the only openly gay sibling I have. We all assume that we have a few others that fall somewhere in the LGBT spectrum, but only Jason has been brave enough to come out. He was visiting for Gay Pride, which just finished up.

Jason lives in San Francisco, and Gay Pride is his favorite event of the year. I was worried that our gay pride would be too small to meet his big city expectations, so I was on a mission to show him that we can hold our own.

This year was the second year that Stoli Vodka has hosted their Best Bartender competition here in Key West, and this year was even more spectacular than last year. They split-up the events around the city, and the gay establishments hosted some incredible free-booze-parties. As usual the events kicked off at the Island House (1129 Fleming) with one of their twice yearly all-welcome parties (don't worry boys, they're back to men only until Fantasy Fest). The event was amazing! It was refreshing having a few girls joining in with the naked-pool-festivities, but sorry to any of you straight girls, it appeared that all the men seemed to be only interested in each other! LOL!

We had more Stoli events at 801 Bourbon, Aqua, and Bourbon

Street Pub (800 block of Duval). Bourbon Street Pub hosted the annual Mr. Key West Pride Competition. The winner was one of their own dancers, so try to make your way down to check them out, while they shake their go-go-asses. They hit the bar-top at 10:00 pm every night.

Jason and I had too much fun! He said he wants to move here. Mostly because a naked pool-party at a San Francisco bath-house would actually be illegal. Who knew?!

If you missed gay pride this year, rest assured that with roughly 25 percent of the island's year-round residents identifying as homosexual, every day in Key West is Gay Pride!

Sometimes I hear tourists saying that Key West isn't as gay as it used to be. They say there were far more "Gay Only" establishments back in the 1990's. However, it's important to remember, that back in the 90's those were the only types of establishments that gay people felt safe to visit and be themselves at. These days, the island is actually gayer and gay friendlier than it ever was. Each year our island becomes more integrated, and you'll find that gay people and straight people hang out with each other in near equal proportions at most establishments in town. We even have a division of our tourism development council that is dedicated to expanding gay tourism to Key West. We also have the Key West Business Guild which is like our "Gay Chamber of Commerce." You can visit their office at 513 Truman Avenue or visit them online at gaykeywestfl.com

FROM YOUR HOST

Hello fellow nudies,

This is my favorite times of the year. The breeze and the water are nice and warm, perfect for running around naked to parties and water adventures. Key West is a small tropical island, but we have plenty for you to do this weekend.

Nomadic SUP's naked paddle boarding has gotten so popular that we've had to add some extra tours. So when you see Cody out at night at the events, please make sure you do not keep him out too late, he needs to rest up for the next day's tours. (For those of you nervous about the skill required for SUP, don't be. Cody is such a great teacher even I can do it!) Since our modest beginning in 2006, Captain Steve and his crew on the Blu Q have welcomed us with their special naked day sailings. A day out on the water with them can be very relaxing with all the naked men and a great crew to feed you and take care of your needs. I guess it can also be a workout too, since there is kayaking, snorkeling, swimming...

We have our great nighttime parties as always. We are excited to host our first party of the weekend at the new and improved La Te Da. Definitely take a look around. Our dear friend Christopher and his staff have been busy sprucing up the property. Thursday's fetish night at Saloon One always packs the house and our Friday moonlight cruise is perhaps the most unique party of the weekend. The main event is Saturday's Masked Ball at Bourbon Street Pub. Wear a mask and you can be whomever you want for the night. (But only a mask – nothing else!)

With all the excitement going on, make sure you don't forget to eat. (We know we do not have to remind you to drink, and the bars appreciate that.) Take a break from all the activity and join us for our naked group dinner at the Flaming Buoy Fillet Company on Friday evening. If you have not been yet, you're missing out on one of our top restaurants and a great time with Scot and Fred, the owners.

On behalf of all our local partners and myself we really do appreciate all of you making the journey down to Key West for Bone Island. Whether it is your 1st time or your 10th, we love seeing all of you and sharing our tropical home with you...naturally.

Welcome to Bone Island Bare It All!

“Speak Now: Marriage Equality on Trial” by Kenji Yoshino

c.2015, Crown

$26.00

If you're wearing a ring there, chances are that it means more than a bit of metal around your digit. It's undoubtedly more precious than the sum of its parts.

It means a commitment of marriage – that is, if you can get married, because some still cannot. And in the new book “Speak Now” by Kenji Yoshino, you'll read about a trial that impacted many an engagement.

Just before Kenji Yoshino married his husband Ron in 2009, the officiant pulled the couple aside and reminded them that, though they were really no different than any other two people in love, he could not marry them under federal law because of DOMA. As they said their vows in Connecticut, another legal drama on the other side of the country was just beginning...

Only four states recognized same-sex marriage then; California wasn't one of them. In 2008, that state's voters passed Proposition 8, effectively amending its constitution to allow legal marriage between opposite-sex couples only. A legal challenge to Prop 8 was filed in California in May of 2009, which ultimately opened the doors for an unlikely pair of lawyers to take the issue to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Attorney Ted Olson was famous for helping to put George Bush in office in 2000, and had worked in Ronald Reagan's Justice Department. Though Olson was known for his conservative stance, he was friends with David Boies, a renowned, more liberal litigator. They seized the opportunity to argue this important case together, and began laying the foundation for it.

But their unusual pairing wasn't the only uniqueness in Hollingsworth v. Perry: The judge assigned to the case was known to be gay. Lead counsel for defense of Prop 8 had once flirted with a pro baseball career. Both sides tried to keep direct mentions of sex out of the courtroom. In the end, children played a large part.

And, though neither side wanted it, the case went to trial.

That last point, says author Kenji Yoshino, came as the biggest surprise. Issues such as same-sex marriage very seldom go to trial; both parties usually try to avoid it long before things ever get that far.

But Yoshino's fascination – and the in-depth examination he offers on Hollingsworth v. Perry – becomes a mixed bag in "Speak Now." On one hand, there are heartfelt examples of people who would most benefit from the defeat of Prop 8, as told from the exciting perspective of a major courtroom drama; on the other hand, there's a lot of legalese here that is only partially explained in layman's terms. We're treated to detailed, sometimes happy human-interest stories (including the authors' own), followed by information that will send many readers scrambling for a legal dictionary. Oy.

Still, despite that near-obstacle, I think this book is worthwhile – if nothing but for the significance of the case it highlights. Read carefully, don't rush yourself, have a legal reference source handy, and "Speak Now" is a book you won't want left on the shelf.

Ask Nana

E-mail your questions to nana@keywestgayrag.com

Dear Nana,

My parents are coming to stay with me and pretty much all my sheets have lube stains on them. Do you think they'll notice or know what it is? Or do you have any advice for how to get the stains out?

Well, first of all, they'll notice. They might not know what they are, but they'll notice. And since you're their sexually active gay child it's probably best not to leave them alone staring at your sheets wondering what sort of Pat Robertson fever dream sex acts you're up to. And since I'm assuming you've already tried washing the sheets this tells me you use a 100% silicone based lubricant. I can respect that. I'm not a big fan of friction in my fart box either. But silicone is not going to completely come out. So, might I suggest you either buy a set of "guest sheets" that you don't get your kitty punched on every weekend or perhaps also switch over to hybrid lubricant. The new hybrids give you grease monkey action you've come to love from a silicone lube with the wash ability of a water-based lube. You're welcome.

What's the weirdest thing anyone ever asked you to do in bed... and did you do it?

Well this one time, it must have been in the 1960's, I met this very attractive Russian man. Like a young Putin but not such a prick. Though his prick was lovely. We were hot and bothered and naked and sweaty and then, out of the blue, he asked me to shit on his dick. That's how he said it too! All normal like he'd just said, "Wanna see a movie later?" I said absolutely not! I mean I might have been a bit of a slut for the times but I was still a lady?! Then I quickly figured out he was actually just asking me to sit on his dick with a thick Russian accent and a bit of a lisp. Lucky for him I was still a bit prudish and not nearly German enough to have just given in to what I thought he'd requested. So that's a good lesson kids: always enunciate when fucking.

*Do you have problems? Of course you do!!
Why not let Nana help you?! Send your questions to:
